

Forms of Art Abstract Art

Did you ever look at a piece of art that was just a box of color or a bunch of squiggly lines and wonder... this is art?!?!? Most likely, you were looking at a piece of abstract<sup>1</sup> art like the painting on the left by Mark Rothko. Abstract art emphasizes color, shape and texture.<sup>2</sup> Sometimes, the artist wants to express a specific idea or feeling through his art. Sometimes, the painting is supposed to have absolutely no meaning at all.

When I first saw abstract art, I hated it. I laughed at it. I pretended that it had a deep meaning just to make fun of it. I only became a fan of abstract art when I first saw Rothko's work. I grew to appreciate his combination of colors and the way he always had two main areas on the canvas.<sup>3</sup> It made me see something in myself through his paintings.

I don't know if Rothko was thinking about anything specific or not when he painted. Not knowing, however, allowed me to come up with my own ideas. When I look at a Rothko, I see myself in two parts. Sometimes, I see a happy side and a sad side. Sometimes, I see love and hate.

I always see something different when I look at abstract art. Next time you're in a museum or looking at an art book, stop and look closer. Instead of seeing lines and colors, see what wonderful things there are within. Let your imagination run free.
